Applicant's arguments and declarations have been fully considered but they are not persuasive to overcome the rejections. Although the instant cell line is define as being "derived from a normal adult, the application does not demonstrate any difference between the cell line claimed and that disclosed in the prior art nor does it provide evidence to refute the holding of anticipation.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims 4-9, 16-17 & 21-26 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

The phrase "normal adult animal" renders the claims indefinite and also appears contrary to the disclosed invention as the examples appear to isolate the cells from a very young mouse.

The showings in the declarations are not commensurate in scope with the instant claims thus the below arguments still apply.

Applicant suggests that the effects of dexamethasone and PTH on the claimed cells show the difference, however there is no side by side direct comparison and therefore the results don't clearly demonstrate a difference.

The arguments do not specifically point to a definition for the cited phrase which makes clear what the limitations are.

Claim 16 is indefinite because no steps for the method are claimed. Claim 17 appears to be improperly dependent on claim 27 (16 would seem to be the appropriate claim).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless -

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 21-26 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Caplan et al(5486359).

Caplan et al teach a population of mesenchymal cells which can differentiate into diverse cell types. The reference also discloses factors which cause such differentiation. The reference anticipates the claim subject matter. The source of the cells may be relevant however it does not appear that the cells per se are different despite the differences in source. Applicant's definition of "cell line" does not exclude the cells of Caplan. The reference anticipates the claim subject matter.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 5-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Caplan et al(as above).

Caplan teaches a mesenchymal cell line which can differentiate into diverse cell types. It would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to use the cells of Caplan in an assay for compounds which would cause the differentiation of the cells and putting the cells in a kit to run said assay.

Accordingly, the claimed invention was prima facie obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made especially in the absence of evidence to the contrary.
